Mrs. Marsh has been cordially welcomed by the American literary public, and there seems to be in this volume many indications that our country possesses, in her, another of that class of poets, whose special privilege it is to reproduce the impressions made upon them by natural scenery...Her genial warmth of sentiment, her keen appreciation of beauty, her fidelity to this poetic inspiration, have presented us with a work, whose pages sparkle with poetic gems, and to which a permanent rank will justly be awarded among the first productions of American Poets.—New Englander, v. 18, 1860, p. 532.

"In this pleasant volume, Mr. Marsh has condensed a great deal of valuable and curious information, not only about the physiology and habits of the "Ship of the Desert," but about its proper use and management. His book is more than a treatise: it is as entertaining as a book of travels, and abounds in pictures from memory of life in the desert and in the East. In the earlier chapters there are evidences of that extensive scholarship and acquaintance with many tongues, for which the writer has so enviable a fame."—*N. A. —A compendious grammar of the Old-Northern or Icelandic language, compiled and translated from the grammars of Rask. Burlington, 1838. D. 11 [+3]+162 [-1] p. 080 1.1

The first Icelandic grammar published outside of Scandinavia. It is based upon Rask's Kortfattet Vejledning til det oldnordiske eller gamle islandske Sprog. København, 1832; but it represents much original work: especially in the sections devoted to inflection and in the treatment of the syntax. The translation was made in 1834-5 but was not printed until 1838. On account of Mr. Marsh's absence from Burlington at the time, the volume was disfigured by so many typographical errors that he never put it upon the market, though copies were freely given to scholars. See the article in the Nation, v. 35, p. 94. 080 35

"Mr. Marsh is known as a scholar of profound and various erudition, and as a writer of strongly marked individuality and nationality.... He is undoubtedly better versed than any American in the freer and vigorous literature of the north of Europe."—E. W. Gilman. Prose writers of America, p. 414.

In this copy the typographical errors have been corrected in pencil by Mr. Marsh.

Internal evidence alone were [illegible] conclusive. The title given above was intended to cover a series of which this first article is entitled: "The desert." "Its object was to demonstrate and defend the influence of what he calls the Gothic element,—akin to if not the same as what we commonly call the Anglo-Saxon,—upon the mind and character of our English and Puritan forefathers. "Although this volume contains, particularly in the notes, a world of illustrations from the author's immense erudition, collected from the study of every available Aryan language this side of Sanscrit, and from those of the Semitic families as well, the book is still wholly intelligible and thoroughly interesting to any person who knows no more of foreign languages than Benjamin Franklin did when he expressed himself in what is almost the best English that was ever written down. When we speak of Mr. Marsh's immense erudition, we express our ruling feeling whenever we lay down this volume. We are not surprised that one living man should have known all the recondite facts which are here arranged together. The wonder is that at any moment, or in any year of his life, one man can recollect them and arrange them in their precise places in the study of this grand organized living being which we call the English language."—*E. "Mr. Marsh belongs to the higher order of men, who organize experience, who make inductions as well as gather the materials for them. His mind drains a vast surface of knowledge, and he not only sees clearly to the farthest corners of earth through the windows of books, but his own eye is watchful, and his memory carries a fact observed in Vermont till he can match and confirm it in Egypt or Italy. We have found his book a delightful one. It suggests thought and pleases the fancy at the same time; for while it implies long study, and has the peculiar library aroma about it, yet its character is such that it seems as if all its books had been found in running brooks, and you are now in the forest, now on the mountain, as you read. . . A book so interesting and instructive, which will lure the young to observe and take delight in Nature, and the mature to respect her rights as essential to their own well-being, which pleads the cause of birds and beasts and trees, we welcome as a public benefaction."—*J. —Italian: L' uomo e la natura. [Florence, 1869?] D. ntp. 620 p. 080 27

"This translation of an early edition of my 'Man and Nature' is a literary curiosity. It was made by a lady not acquainted with the subject, and with a very imperfect knowledge of both English and Italian. The gross and often ludicrous errors are very numerous, numbering not less than 6,000, or 10 to the page. The original translation, although printed, was destroyed by the publisher and another prepared. There is connected with this book a philogical fact of a good deal of interest. I had frequently introduced into the text citations from French authors, translated of course into English. These are generally faithfully translated into Italian, bad as the translation of English generally is. I, at first, thought that the translator must have found and used the original authorities. This I found afterwards was a mistake; she had merely re-translated my translations. Did my translations correspond so closely to the French idiom that the French construction was visible in them?"—Ms. note by Mr. Marsh.

"In the statement of general principles and in the felicity of popular illustration, the former course is perhaps superior. The present volume has a higher special value, from its very full exhibition of those five centuries of growth which carried the language over from the barrenness of Saxon Chronicles to the culmination of its wealth and power in the age of Shakespeare. All the materials are given here which a student requires, not only to follow the course of that development, but also to learn enough of the structure and vocabulary of Saxon and early English, to read the very ample illustrations that are given, with independent knowledge and pleasure of his own. Mr. Marsh has labored that nothing shall be wanting in this work, except what is required by those who make of these dialects a separate and extended study. And even those who do, will find great benefit in the guidance of a scholar so admirable and accomplished."—J. H. Allen in Christian examiner, v. 74, p. 448-9.

Pote, Joseph. The lives of those eminent antiquaries, John Leland, Thomas Hearne, and Anthony à Wood: with memoirs relating to persons and literature. Oxford, 1772. 2 v. O. por. pl. 928 4

Entered in this catalogue under Huddesford, with the date misprinted as 1773. This copy was formerly the property of "Rear Admiral The Lord Mack Kerr." It contains ms. corrections and notes signed "J. P." From them we learn that the preface, and the lives of Leland and Bale were written by Pote, while vol. 2, containing the life of Wood, was edited by Huddesford : also that the publisher was indebted to Jos. Sanford of Baliol college for the copy of Leland's Laboryouse Journey, from which the reprint in vol. 1 was made. From these facts it would seem that the work should be entered under Pote.

The famous Nuremberg chronicle, a summary of universal history and geography. The first page is the title-page of the index and reads: Registrum huius operis libri cronicarum cū figuris et ymagibus ab inicio mūdi. "It contains more than two thousand impressions of wood-cuts, taken from about three hundred cuts—for the cut that served for the portrait of Paris of Troy was used for Odofredus of Germany and the poet Dante of Italy. Wood-cuts professing to represent cities and battles in Greece and Syria were repeated for battles and cities in France and Germany, with an indifference to the anachronisms and a cool disregard of the incredulity of the reader that are amazing. The author had a keen relish for the marvelous—for men with one eye, with immense ears, with enormous legs, and like monstrosities."—De Vinne. This volume is said to contain the earliest specimens of printed maps. The abovementioned portrait of a perspiring Nuremberger did duty also for Thales, Nehemiah, Menander, Cato, Persius, Plutarch, Porphyry, Alcuin, Anastasius and Avenzoar. The Odofredus is not "of Germany," but the Bolognese jurist.
